These days, everyone accesses the news through the Internet or social media, and often selectively takes the information ㉠ that suits their tastes or beliefs. However, consistently encountering similar perspectives without considering alternative views can lead you to be trapped in an "echo chamber." An echo chamber refers to an enclosed space where sound doesn't leak out and ㉢ returns as an echo. The term "echo chamber" is also used to describe any situation ㉡ which you only hear opinions you already agree with. This can distort your understanding of reality, and limit your ability to think critically and engage in meaningful debates. Worse still, an echo chamber may foster social division, ㉣ making collaboration on common issues challenging. To avoid falling into this trap, you must actively seek diverse sources of information and engage with people who have different views. Always remember ㉤ to check the information you receive, and keep an open mind when discussing new ideas. Even if you really want something to be true, it doesn't always mean that it is true.

❖ 다음 글을 읽고 물음에 답하시오.

Fake news on social media spreads significantly farther and faster than true stories. A study by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the US has shown that fake news spreads online 6 times faster than real news on average.

One explanation for this phenomenon is that people like new and provocative things. When information is astonishing, people not only feel that it is surprising, but they also want to share the stimulating news with others. By passing it to others on social media, they can gain attention because they are the first to post previously unknown, but possibly false, information. Also, fake news goes viral because people in their daily lives tend to think simply and effortlessly. It is more likely for them to believe new information without any proof, instead of critically examining it.

5. 밑글을 읽고 답할 수 없는 질문을 모두 고르시오.5)

- ① How many times faster fake news spreads than true news?
- ② What psychological motivations people have when spreading fake news?
- ③ Why people do not think critically about fake news?
- ④ Why people feel that fake news is newer?
- ⑤ How people tend to process information in their daily lives?

6. 밑글의 요지로 가장 적절한 것은?6)

- ① Social media is very effective in widely spreading truthful information.
- ② Fake news can never spread without going through strict verification processes.
- ③ People should always critically analyze information when they encounter it.
- ④ People show greater interest in true news than in fake news.
- ⑤ Fake news circulates rapidly and is readily accepted by people because it is sensational and novel.

Moreover, people are inclined to believe information that fits their prejudices or experiences even when not true. In this process, people easily fall into the trap of "_____(A)_____." That is, they selectively accept news in a way that only confirms their beliefs and ignore news that doesn't support them. During election season, for example, people tend to blindly believe any news describing their favored candidates in a positive way, while unconsciously believing news that reports something negative about other candidates.

With so much information on the Internet, how can you make sure that fake news does not mislead you? First, read beyond the ____ (A) ____ headlines. They can be so stimulating to get more clicks that you may click on them accidentally. So don't just read the headlines, but read the text carefully. Second, don't read the news at face value. Exercise critical thinking skills to judge the news. You should question, analyze, and evaluate what you read. Third, examine your ____ (B) _____. Consider if your own beliefs could affect your judgment. Ask yourself if you are only reading articles that suit your opinion, and look for articles that oppose your opinion as well. Finally, check the credibility of the source. You should examine who wrote the news story and what the intent was behind writing the news story. You also need to check whether the news story is from a reliable media source and the evidence is valid.

In the digital age, it might be impossible to avoid or eliminate all false information that spread online. However, if you have the ability to view information critically and objectively, you will be able to reduce the damage that fake news can cause. Don't forget! Anyone can be the next person producing or spreading fake news!
